

From: [REDACTED]
To: Anti Discrimination Law
Subject: To maintain the diversity of education in Australia please support the rights of religious schools
Date: Wednesday, 22 February 2023 6:56:02 AM

Dear Australian Law Reform Commission,

Below is my submission to the ALRC Religious Educational Institutions Inquiry's consultation paper:

I am a mother of 7 and have several grandchildren progressing through the school system; both systems have their strengths and weaknesses; a good school has clearly defined values, that the school community strongly adhere to. One thing that sets religious schools apart is their faith values. Parents of students at religious schools expect that the school will pass these values on to their students.

I am encouraged by some of the points contained in the four propositions. For example, proposition D states, "Religious educational institutions should be able to expect all staff to respect their institutional ethos. A religious educational institution should be able to take action to prevent any staff member from actively undermining the institutional ethos of their employer." It also proposes: "Religious educational institutions should be able to impose reasonable and proportionate codes of staff conduct and behaviour relating to respect for the institution's ethos, subject to ordinary principles of employment law and prohibitions of discrimination on other grounds."

However, the last point in Proposition D effectively counteracts the above principles by saying, "Respect for an educational institution's ethos and codes of conduct or behaviour should not require employees to hide their own sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, marital or relationship status, or pregnancy in connection with work or in private life, or to refrain from supporting another person with these attributes."

One example of how this last point will play out in practice is given in the consultation paper itself: "a school could not terminate the employment of a lesbian teacher on the grounds that she was actively undermining the religious ethos of the institution merely by entering into a marriage with a woman." I entirely disagree with this. If a Christian or Muslim school cannot lift a finger against something as blatantly opposed to their religious teachings as this, the whole ethos of the school cannot but fall apart. If schools are to uphold religious principles and give students examples to follow, they must retain the right to consider important factors, such as a public homosexual marriage or publicly acting as the opposite gender, when making employment decisions.

This is why I call upon you to support, rather than remove, these rights of religious schools so that Australia can maintain its diversity of education.

Yours sincerely,

Jennifer Madden

[REDACTED]